ture while enjoying some amazing food and good parties as well.

Last week the 2009 San Pedro Lobster Fest was a huge success and visitors and residents alike enjoyed the festivities. The event kicked off on Sunday, June 14th with the opening ceremony and "Meat and Greet" party at El Divino with cocktails, dance presentations and live music with Lobster Fest mainstays the Fat Cats. Throughout the week, each day brought a new party, with the opening day of Lobster season celebrated at Fido's Courtyard and Fat Cats' music. On Tuesday Portofino held a special lobster beach BBQ and afternoon happy hour. Wednesday the party continued at Pedro's Inn for lobster pizza, Texas Hold'em Poker and music. Thursday night the Tackle Box rocked solid with DJ Debbie while serving lobster ceviche and lobster quesadillas. Friday night the party became a tad more sophisticated with a gourmet lobster menu at the Victoria House and live music with the Fat Cats and the big Lobster Festival Block Party at Central Park on Saturday night culminated the week's events.

Great food and great music was the perfect ingredient for an evening of socializing and enjoying the cultural diversity of San Pedro, and Saturday night was no exception. Dozens of local restaurants were on sight in elaborately decorated booths showcasing their lobster specialties and competing for winning status in the categories of best cocktail, best lobster appetizer, best lobster entrée, best dessert and best overall booth. Each participating restaurant brought to the table their own unique signature dishes that boasted culinary influences from all corners of the globe. It was also a great way for visitors to be introduced to the large variety of restaurants on the island while

Pages - a Bookstore

The variety of books available gives something for everyone. The Belize section contains informative and humorous selections. Curl up on the couch and catch up on your reading on a rainy day.

In all the hustle and bustle that can come with packing for a long awaited vacation your list of things to bring can be long (and even misplaced) at times! As you tick your way down your list the inventory might read, toothbrush? Check! Sunscreen? Check! Sunglasses? Sun hat? Check! Bikini's? Check! Bug spray? Check! Sexy little sundress? Check! Jewelry, make-up and accessories? Check! Lots of cash? Check! What more could a tropical vacation require? So off you go into the wild blue Caribbean ready for some quality time in the surf and sun. Once you have arrived to your destination and you are properly lathered and sprawled out on a fabulous beach chair with an umbrella'd cocktail in hand it occurs to you, something is missing...OMG, you forgot your BOOK! Now for some of us who consider a good book an essential component to a perfect vacation this could only mean HOLIDAY crisis!

But have no fear, because if you are fortunate enough to be vacationing in San Pedro your crisis will be short lived. Once you have visited Pages Bookstore you will find enough books to get you through those long hours in the sun and gosh forbid if it rains your day can still be a delicious one curled up with a good book while it pours monkeys and iguanas outside!

Pages is located in the Vilma Linda Plaza across from the RC School in the big purple building on Tarpon Street. Tucked away inside the inviting courtyard, Pages is a hidden treasure. Quaint and cozy, the book store has an extensive inventory of new hardback books as well as new and used paperbacks. There is a comfy reading area with an overstuffed couch and soft lighting where you can enjoy a quite read or

Sunday brought the end to the activities with a beachfront lobster BBQ at Catamaran Beach Bar Caribbean Villas Resort. The crowd lamented on the end of a great week but eager anticipation for next year's San Pedro Lobster Fest was already brewing.

Wolfe's
Woofers

I Wonned
You

"How are you doing today, Dick?" I asked.

Dick Gentry pulled up a chair and sat at the table with me on the beach at BC's.

"It's going great," he said. "It's early for you to be sitting down. Is the band equipment for The Usual Suspects already set up?"

"We sure are. When Sherry and Maverick finish tuning we'll have about twenty minutes to sit and relax before we start the Sunday jam session. Mike already had the drums in place before we got here."

"Hey Alex," Dick called. "What are you up to today? Where are your buddies?"

Alex is one of the mob of boys that sell bracelets and jewelry on the beach. They range in age from about eight to twelve years old and are harder to avoid than condo salesmen. They are just as persistent, too.

"I'm waiting for my friends," Alex said, as he drew a line in the sand with his foot. "We are having a race from Holiday Hotel to BC's. I am the referee for the race."

Just then we heard a yell from the beach. In a cloud of beach sand and with much huffing and puffing three little boys came flying around the corner racing for all they were worth.

"I wonned you! I wonned you!" Pedro said, as he crossed the line first. "I am the fastest runner in the world."

"No you're not," Juan said. "My dad could win you. He is really fast. He can throw a ball to me and catch it before it even reaches me."

"My dad could win your dad," Pedro said. "When he goes hunting he can shoot a gun and be there before the bullet."

"See?" Dick said to me. "We men learn how to do this at an early age. The first liar never stands a chance."

"How about you, Jaime?" he asked. "Is your dad as fast as Juan and Pedro's dads are?"

"My dad could win both of them," Jaime said. "They don't even know anything about fast."

"How is that?"

Jaime said, "My dad works for the government. He stops working at five o'clock and he is already home by three thirty."
